

Please do not weaken Indiana's Telephone Privacy law by allowing CBA to call consumers in a supposed "previously established relationship." These phone calls are a disturbance to a peaceful evening. Before I was on the no-call list, I was receiving approximately twelve phone calls a day from solicitors. Being that I am on a budget, I do not have caller-ID on my phone, and thus would need to answer when it rang. I could hardly complete a task without being interrupted by fast-talking sales representatives who called daily. If these companies in the CBA have "previously established relationships," then they also have other means of contacting their consumers.
